Foreword

The 1999 Victorian State election will be remembered as one of the most significant in Victoria's history. The final outcome saw the Kennett Coalition Government defeated after seven years in office and replaced by the Australian Labor Party with the support of three independent members of the Legislative Assembly. The election of three independents to the Legislative Assembly was an unprecedented outcome in fifty years of Victorian State elections.

Also unprecedented was the news on the afternoon of election day that one of the candidates for Frankston East District had died. As required by law, the election for Frankston East failed and a writ was issued for a supplementary election which was held four weeks after the State election. The significance of the supplementary election was not apparent until the days immediately following the State election, when it became clear that no party had sufficient numbers to form a government. During this period there was constant media speculation regarding the final outcome. These circumstances caused the Frankston East supplementary election to be the most vigorously contested election in recent history, and the media scrutiny of candidates and political parties was extremely intense. The Victorian Electoral Commission (VEC), and the returning officer for the supplementary election, went to extra lengths to ensure that all electors who were eligible to vote at the election were able to do so, and the VEC came through this period extremely well and without criticism.

The 1999 State election result saw some of the closest voting in recent history: Geelong District was won by just sixteen votes and Gippsland Province by 688 votes. Because of this, the electoral administration was put under very close scrutiny, and it is pleasing to report that the VEC's election procedures withstood this scrutiny. There were no appeals to the Court of Disputed Returns regarding any of the election results.

The period of uncertainty following the State election posed an additional challenge for the VEC. Usually, after a State election the returning officers complete their work in approximately four weeks and the temporary office accommodation is dismantled. On this occasion, with no party able to form a government, and the independents not indicating which party they would support until after the completion of the Frankston East supplementary election, it was not certain whether another State election might be required. Under these extraordinary circumstances it was necessary to ensure that the infrastructure remained in place to enable the VEC to conduct another State election if required. As things transpired, after the result of the Frankston East supplementary election the independents decided to support the Australian Labor Party, which was able to form a government with a majority of one, and the possibility of another State election receded.

The 1999 State election result will possibly be one of the most analysed Victorian State elections in modern times. This election report is an important record of the administration and conduct of this significant election. The VEC introduced modern electronic management practices that would improve election services to voters. This report comments on the performance of critical election arrangements and procedures and, where appropriate, indicates directions for future improvement. The report also makes a number of recommendations to deal with areas in need of urgent legislative change.

Finally, the contribution made by the VEC's staff, who provided tireless effort and personal commitment to ensure the highest quality electoral services were provided to the electors of Victoria, should be acknowledged.

Introduction

The State election held on 18 September 1999 saw a change of Government in Victoria. The former Coalition Government of the Liberal and National parties won a total of 43 Legislative Assembly seats, and the Australian Labor Party won 42 seats. The Australian Labor Party formed Government with the support of the three independent MPs.

On 24 August 1999, the Premier, the Hon Jeffrey Kennett, MP, announced that the Victorian State election would be held on 18 September 1999.

In addition, three by-elections were announced for:

Ballarat Province—due to the resignation of the Hon Robert Knowles, MLC;

Melbourne Province—due to the resignation of the Hon Barry Pullen, MLC; and

Melbourne North Province—due to the resignation of the Hon Caroline Hogg, MLC.

In each case, the Member of the Legislative Council had resigned prior to the expiry of their term (due to expire at the State election following this State election).

The key dates for the State election and the three simultaneous Province by-elections were:

Issue of writs	24 August 1999
Close of rolls	27 August 1999
Close of nominations	12 noon, 3 September 1999
Election day	18 September 1999
Return of writs	on or before 8 October 1999

In addition, a supplementary election was required for the Legislative Assembly District of Frankston East due to the death during the State election of the sitting Member and candidate, Mr Peter McLellan, MP. The date of this supplementary election was 16 October 1999.

The key dates were:

Issue of writ	21 September 1999
Close of roll	27 August 1999 (same date as the State election)
Close of nominations	12 noon, 1 October 1999
Election day	16 October 1999
Return of writ	on or before 29 October 1999

Legislative changes affecting the 1999 Victorian State election

The Attorney-General introduced The Constitution Act Amendment (Amendment) Bill 1999 (the Bill) into Parliament on 15 April 1999, and it became law on 6 June 1999. The legislative changes included a number of amendments to The Constitution Act Amendment Act 1958 (the Act) that modernized the management of the electoral rolls and improved the administration of parliamentary elections. The Bill also widened the VEC's charter to explicitly include promoting public awareness of electoral matters through education and information programs.

The Bill introduced the following changes to election procedures for the 1999 State election.

1. The Electoral Commissioner is to be the Electoral Registrar for all Districts and Provinces

The Act formerly allowed the Electoral Commissioner to appoint electoral registrars. However, it did not make it clear that the Electoral Commissioner is the Registrar for the State and consequently has the power to manage the entire enrolment process, including performing such functions as deleting, adding and transferring electors as required from the electoral rolls. The legislation amended the Act to make it clear that the Electoral Commissioner is the Electoral Registrar for the State in order to improve the efficiency of managing the electoral roll.

Implementation at the 1999 Victorian State election

Some of the functions in the Act previously carried out by electoral registrars for individual subdivisions are now carried out centrally by the Electoral Commissioner.

2. Electoral Commissioner to be responsible for all election advertisements

Previously the Electoral Commissioner was responsible for placing certain election advertisements and returning officers were responsible for placing others. Under the new legislation the Electoral Commissioner is responsible for placing all electoral advertisements.

Implementation at the 1999 Victorian State election

It was possible to produce advertising centrally for the State election without making reference to these advertisements being placed on behalf of individual returning officers.

3. Nominations

The legislation:

- enabled registered political parties to nominate their candidates with the Electoral Commissioner up to 24 hours before the close of nominations. Thereafter they could nominate their candidates with the appropriate returning officer;
- increased candidates' deposits from $250 to $350 for the Legislative Assembly, and from $250 to $700 for the Legislative Council;
- enabled candidates' deposits to be made in building society, credit union or non-bank financial institution cheque, or by bank cheque or in cash; and
- clarified that a candidate could nominate for only one Province or District.

Implementation at the 1999 Victorian State election

At the State election 319 nominations were lodged with the Electoral Commissioner. This represents all the nominations made by registered political parties.

There was no negative feedback on the increase in the amount of the candidates' deposit, and candidates made good use of the facility to lodge deposits by non-bank financial institution cheques.

There is no evidence of candidates nominating for more than one District or Province at Victorian State elections in the past. The change in legislation removed the possibility of a candidate being able to do this.

4. Draw for candidates' positions on the ballot paper

The legislation provided for a single random draw or for a computer generated random draw for the position of candidates on the ballot paper.

Implementation at the 1999 Victorian State election

The electronic draw was successfully employed at the State election, removing large data entry and subsequent quality assurance steps from the process. It significantly increased the efficiency of providing the result of the ballot draw to the media and ballot paper printers.

The electronic draw for ballot positions was accepted by candidates and the media attending ballot draws. The printing of candidates' names in ballot paper order immediately after the draw was considered to be an improvement on the previous practice of waiting for data entry and proof reading.

5. Questions put to voters

One of the questions put to voters by polling officials before they vote was 'Where do you reside?' The legislation changed the question to 'Where do you live?'

Implementation at the 1999 Victorian State election

This change was well accepted at the State election.

6. Period when returning officers can accept postal votes

The legislation reduced the period within which postal and absent votes may be accepted by returning officers for scrutiny from 13 days to 9 days.

Implementation at the 1999 Victorian State election

There were no instances where postal votes were post marked on or before election day and received by returning officers after the nine-day cut off.

7. Assistance to disabled electors

A polling place manager was able to assist a disabled elector to vote outside a polling place.

Implementation at the 1999 Victorian State election

The VEC issued directions to polling place managers regarding the provision of assistance to disabled electors. Typically, it enabled a polling place manager to take ballot papers to a disabled elector who may have been driven to the polling place. Anecdotal evidence suggests that a number of voters took advantage of this new facility.

8. Restrictions on exit polling

The legislation prohibited the release of exit polling figures prior to the close of polling at 6 pm on election night, and required that any person conducting an exit poll at a polling place be subjected to the same restriction as people distributing how-to-vote cards. Exit polling is therefore not permitted within 6 metres of a polling place.

Implementation at the 1999 Victorian State election

A company which had conducted exit polling at previous by-elections was contacted prior to the State election. The company indicated that it was already aware of the change in legislation. No exit polling took place at the State election.

9. Savings provisions removed so that full preferential voting applies at parliamentary elections

Voters are required to indicate preferences for all candidates standing in an election. A number of provisions to save certain types of votes were removed so that these votes would be informal and excluded from the count. The legislation therefore established Victoria's voting system as a full preferential voting system.

Implementation at the 1999 Victorian State election

It has been usual practice at past elections to emphasise the correct way to vote, and this message was again clearly presented in the VEC's advertising for the 1999 State election.

The legislative change meant that certain types of votes, which had previously been regarded as formal votes and included in the count, would now be regarded as informal votes. There was no evidence of this having a significant impact on the rate of informal voting at the election.

10. Political parties may attach an application for a postal vote to other political material

The legislation enabled political parties to attach an application for a postal vote to a brochure or handbill that may contain political material.

Implementation at the 1999 Victorian State election

The new legislation worked well and enabled the VEC to address any complaints from electors regarding political material accompanying a postal vote application.

The VEC will meet with the main political parties who issue postal vote applications to discuss improvements in the design of the application forms.

11. Expand the categories of people who are eligible to register as a general postal voter

The following categories of people became eligible to apply to become a general postal voter and in so doing have their ballot papers sent to them without application at the time of an election:

- persons caring for others who are seriously ill or infirm;
- silent electors; and
- persons whose religious beliefs prevent them from attending a polling place on election day.

This brought the criteria for eligibility to be a registered general postal voter into line with the requirements of Federal legislation.

Implementation at the 1999 Victorian State election

The number of general postal voters increased from 9,587 at the time of the 1996 State election to 17,452 at the 1999 State election. This was mainly due to changes in the legislation at Federal and State levels.

12. The Electoral Commissioner is to be responsible for identifying non-voters

The Electoral Commissioner was made responsible for identifying non-voters. Previously returning officers were required to perform this task.

Implementation at the 1999 Victorian State election

This improved the efficiency of implementing the compulsory voting provisions by centralising the process using the VEC's new Election Management System.

13. One ballot paper for all types of voting

Legislation reduced the number of different types of ballot papers to one type only—covering ordinary voting and section voting (postal, absent and unenrolled).

Implementation at the 1999 Victorian State election

There were considerable efficiencies in using one ballot paper. One advantage was that ballot paper printing was completed in record time. This reduced the number of hand written ballot papers, as fully printed postal ballot papers were available to returning officers and postal voting officers on the Monday after the close of nominations (on Friday).

Pre-election preparation by the Victorian Electoral Commission

Pre-election preparation by the Victorian Electoral Commission

The role of the Electoral Commissioner and the Victorian Electoral Commission

The position of Electoral Commissioner is a statutory appointment made by the Governor in Council. The Victorian Electoral Commission (VEC) is the administrative agency through which the Electoral Commissioner's statutory obligations are carried out. The Electoral Commissioner's chief responsibility is to conduct elections for the Victorian Parliament. The responsibilities and functions of the Electoral Commissioner are independent from Government. The Electoral Commissioner is required to report annually to Parliament, and to report to Parliament within twelve months of any parliamentary election.

Election timeframe

The Victorian State election is held every three to four years. Under the Constitution Act 1975, the Legislative Assembly has a maximum four-year term and, under usual circumstances, a minimum three-year term. This provides a window of opportunity within an approximately twelve month timeframe for the Government to call an election. This situation presents a challenge to the VEC's preparation and planning to conduct the State election as preparations must be made without knowing in advance the date the election will be held.

Staffing and infrastructure

The conduct of a State election is the culmination of three years planning and preparation by the VEC. The administrative infrastructure and large number of personnel that must be put in place immediately a State election is announced make the preparations for a State election comparable in size and complexity to those of a military operation.

The VEC operates with a small core staff of seventeen, which is supplemented by a larger number of temporary and casual staff. At the time of the State election there were some ninety full-time staff working at the VEC. In addition, contract staff are engaged to provide specialist and expert service such as IT support or election software development and advice. There were also some 16,000 people engaged by the VEC to conduct the State election in returning officers' offices throughout the election period and in polling places on election day.

There are a large number of operations required for the State election that require the expertise of external service providers. The contracting of external service providers allows VEC staff to focus on their election-specific areas of expertise. It also ensures that Victorians are provided with the best quality election service, using the latest technologies and systems to achieve the successful conduct of the State election.

Prior to the window of opportunity for the 1999 State election to be called, the VEC entered into contracts with a range of specialist service providers. Each contractor was selected after a competitive tendering process, taking into account the quality of their service, competitive costs and value for money.

Contracted services for the State election include:

- information technology;
- election advertising;
- public relations;
- telephone enquiry service;
- printing;

- cartage and courier;
- tally room construction;
- election staffing;
- payroll; and
- mail-house.

Electronic management of the 1999 Victorian State election

The use of information technology (IT) to provide information and services in a fast and efficient manner is now commonplace in the community. There is now an expectation by all the VEC's key stakeholders that IT be used to facilitate the election process. In view of this, the VEC has continued to look at ways of improving services using IT and has developed election-specific software to manage databases and streamline what were once cumbersome and time-consuming manual processes.

This resulted in the VEC's new, electronic election management system – EMS 2000 – to assist with the conduct of the State election (as well as future Council elections).

EMS 2000 is an integrated election management system that was used by all returning officers and the central administration at the State election. For the first time, all the information needed to conduct the State election was collected in a single database. Information was entered at the returning officer's office and was replicated to the central server located at the VEC. The information in the central database was subjected to rigorous quality assurance processes that ensured that the State election was conducted efficiently and in accordance with legislative requirements.

A major feature of EMS 2000 is that it integrates a number of functions that were previously handled separately. The main functions managed by EMS during the State election were:

Resourcing

EMS 2000 calculated the type and quantity of office equipment, stationery, voting materials and staff required by each of the fifty-four returning officers' offices, and for each of the 1,616 polling places on election day.

Candidates' nominations

Returning officers entered nominations into EMS 2000 as they were received from candidates. This information provided the data for:

- printing seven million ballot papers;
- advertising for the State election;
- answering enquiries from the media and political parties;
- publishing on the VEC's web site; and
- constructing the VEC's tally board for election night.

Ballot draw and printing of ballot papers

Returning officers used EMS 2000 to conduct the random draw for candidates' positions on ballot papers. The resulting data was used to print the ballot papers for each electorate in the Legislative Council and the Legislative Assembly. In the past this draw had been conducted by drawing numbers out of a barrel.

Postal voting

Applications for postal votes were recorded in one central location at the VEC. The VEC received 134,454 applications during the State election. Successful applicants were sent their ballot material. Unsuccessful applicants received a rejection letter and a new application form. Returned postal votes were processed through EMS 2000, which recorded postal voters as having voted.

Registration of how-to-vote cards

Victorian legislation requires that how-to-vote (HTV) cards handed out on election day be registered with the VEC. EMS 2000 provided a central registry of HTV cards, which allowed the VEC to provide timely and definitive responses to enquiries about HTV cards.

Election results

On election night, results were entered into EMS 2000 by returning officers. The results were transmitted in real time to the media, to the tally room for printing and posting on the tally board, to the VEC's web site and to the parliamentary registered political parties.

Payroll

EMS 2000 was used to calculate the payroll for all 16,000 staff and polling officials employed during the short period of the election.

Services to registered political parties and candidates

Services to registered political parties and candidates

Briefings to registered political parties

At the end of April 1999, the Victorian Electoral Commission (VEC) conducted briefing sessions for registered political parties (RPPs) on the State election process. The sessions provided information on the VEC's preparations for the State election, the role of returning officers, postal voting arrangements, nominations procedures, candidates' electoral expenses, the registration of how-to-vote cards, voter information through advertising and the VEC's web site, and complaints procedures.

Those attending were also provided with maps showing the location of returning officers' offices, and lists of polling places, special hospitals and postal voting locations.

An information kit on the State election was also provided at the briefing sessions. Copies of this kit had previously been posted to all Members of Parliament and registered political parties.

The sessions were well attended by representatives from the majority of registered political parties.

The VEC's returning officers

As at the 1996 Victorian State election, the VEC appointed fifty-four returning officers to conduct the 1999 State election.

These fifty-four returning officers conducted the election for eighty-eight members of the Legislative Assembly, twenty-two members of the Legislative Council, as well as three additional members of the Legislative Council where simultaneous by-elections were held.

Prior to the 1996 State election, a different returning officer was allocated responsibility for each of the State's electorates. The reduction in the number of returning officers conducting elections has proved to be an efficient and effective innovation in Victoria's electoral practice.

Appendix 1 lists the returning officers with responsibility for each of the elections being conducted.

In the period prior to an election, returning officers establish offices and employ staff to facilitate the smooth running of the election for their electorates. They issue postal votes, receive candidates' nominations and organise the draw for the order of the candidates' names on the ballot papers, register how-to-vote cards, and organise staff and polling places for election day. On election day, the returning officer is responsible for the conduct of the election and the counting of votes for those electorates for which he/she has responsibility.

Support for the nominations process

The VEC advertised for nominations prominently in all daily newspapers throughout Victoria on the day after the State election was announced.

Returning officers provided prospective candidates with a candidate's kit that included:

- the appropriate District or Province nomination form;
- a How-to-Vote Card Declaration form;
- a Candidate's Handbook;
- a Guide to Scrutineers at State Elections leaflet ;
- a Registration of How-to-Vote Cards in State Elections leaflet;
- a list of polling places for the relevant District or Province;

Handing out how-to-vote cards in Brunswick.

- a District or Province fact sheet;
- the returning officer's contact details;
- key election dates; and
- details on the number of issuing points at each polling place in the District or Province and an estimate of the number of votes likely.

Returning officers offered to meet with each candidate as soon as possible after the acceptance of the candidate's nomination in order to outline the election process and clarify any matters.

Registered political parties were given the opportunity to submit details of their nominations in bulk, on disk, to be loaded directly into the VEC's election management system. Three political parties took advantage of this facility.

Registered political parties submitted 319 nominations and 76 nominations were received from independent candidates, making a total of 395 candidates for the election (including candidates in the Frankston East supplementary election). In addition, eleven candidates stood for the three Province by-elections held simultaneously with the 1999 State election.

The registration of how-to-vote cards

Registered how-to-vote (HTV) cards are the only form of printed electoral material that can be lawfully handed out, distributed or otherwise made available within 400 metres of a polling place on election day.

The Constitution Act Amendment Act 1958 makes provision for persons or organisations to register their HTV cards with the returning officer for the electorate in which they wish to distribute HTV cards. Alternatively, the legislation enables registered political parties to apply directly to the Electoral Commissioner to have their HTV cards registered.

Information about the registration of HTV cards was provided to:

- registered political parties at briefings held prior to the State election; and
- candidates by returning officers directly and in the candidate's kit.

The key dates for the registration of HTV cards at the 1999 State election were:

- submission to returning officers: 6 September to 12 noon, 9 September 1999; and
- submissions by registered political parties to the Electoral Commissioner: 4 September to 12 noon, 11 September 1999.

At the 1999 State election, 575 HTV cards were registered.

Provision of electoral rolls to candidates

Each candidate in the 1999 State election was provided with a copy of the electoral roll for the relevant electorate on floppy disk. Information and software were provided to make the file suitable for use in a mail merge process.

Provision of election results to parliamentary political parties

The VEC provided the three parliamentary political parties with computer software to enable them to view primary and two-candidate-preferred results for each electorate as they were entered into the election management system at returning officers' offices during the count. This included results recorded on election night as well as absent, postal and pre-poll results recorded in the nine days following election day.

There were 1,616 polling places on election day.

Candidates' expenses

The return of candidates' expenses at a State election is governed by Division 19 of Part V of The Constitution Act Amendment Act 1958.

The maximum amount which candidates may lawfully spend for election to the Legislative Assembly or the Legislative Council is $5,000. This limit relates only to expenditure incurred by the candidate. There is no limit on expenditure by persons or organisations on a candidate's behalf.

As at 1 April 2000, 392 of the 406 candidates had lodged the required material. All of these lodged expenditures within the prescribed limit. The remaining 14 candidates have been contacted regarding their obligations and prosecution procedures for non-compliance have commenced.

The VEC's performance in providing services to registered political parties and candidates

The VEC engaged ACNielsen to conduct a survey of registered political parties and candidates regarding the services provided and the VEC's performance at the State election.

Survey of parliamentary political parties

ACNielsen conducted a survey of the three parliamentary political parties: the Australian Labor Party, the Liberal Party and the National Party. Interviews took place on 16 February 2000.

The survey showed that the three parliamentary political parties regarded the overall performance of the VEC as being of a high standard.

Other results of the survey are summarised below:

- all three parties were highly satisfied with the provision of information prior to the State election. The parties felt that access to the Commissioner and staff was high, questions were answered quickly, clearly and comprehensively, and suggestions were fully considered;
- two of the parties would like to see improvements in the process of electronic lodgement of candidates' nominations, whereas one party preferred the paper based system of nominating;
- all three parties were satisfied with the registration of how-to-vote card procedure, and felt that access and responsiveness to concerns was excellent; and
- all three parties felt that the rules for the distribution of how-to-vote cards for voting at special hospitals were problematic.

The VEC did not receive any formal complaints from registered political parties about its performance during or after the election.

Survey of candidates

ACNielsen conducted a telephone survey of a random sample of 58 candidates contesting the State election. The sample was selected from candidates for the Legislative Assembly and the Legislative Council, and from candidates in urban, regional and rural areas.

The sample also included successful and unsuccessful candidates. Interviews took place from 29 October until 2 November 1999.

The survey showed that nearly all candidates (95 per cent) were, overall, either satisfied or very satisfied with the way the VEC managed the State election.

Other results of the survey of candidates are summarised below:

- 84 per cent were either satisfied or very satisfied with the Candidate's Handbook;
- satisfaction with the performance of returning officers was very high, with 97 per cent rating the returning officer helpful at all times, and 95 per cent rating the returning officer as impartial at all times;
- 85 per cent had seen or heard electoral advertising prior to the election, with the highest awareness (92 per cent) in non-metropolitan areas;
- newspaper advertising was considered more effective (84 per cent) than television (73 per cent) or radio (65 per cent);
- 72 per cent were either satisfied or very satisfied with the efficiency of the pre-poll voting service;
- 60 per cent were satisfied with the VEC's hospital and aged care voting services, with 86 per cent of candidates satisfied or very satisfied with the helpfulness of staff;
- 88 per cent considered that polling booths were located conveniently or very conveniently;
- 83 per cent were satisfied with or very satisfied with the processes involved in the counting of votes; and
- 72 per cent were satisfied or very satisfied with the communication of results once votes were counted.

The VEC did not receive any formal complaints about the performance of its returning officers during or after the election. (One complaint about the action of a returning officer in withdrawing a candidate's how-to-vote card was later withdrawn. See the following section: Complaints by candidates about the VEC's conduct of the State election.)

Public buildings all over the State, including the Youth and Recreation Centre at Lakes Entrance, became polling places on election day.

Complaints about candidates

During the course of the State election, the VEC received a total of 31 complaints against persons or organisations. Of these, 21 were about candidates; four about organisations; and six about the media. This is comparable to the number of such complaints received during the 1996 State election (33 complaints). Of the 21 complaints received about candidates, five were in relation to a letter sent to voters by the (then) Premier, the Hon Jeff Kennett, MP. The VEC replied advising that the Premier's letters did not breach provisions of The Constitution Act Amendment Act 1958. Of the remaining 16 letters of complaint about the actions of candidates, a total of seven resulted in actions by the VEC. One complaint regarding an allegation of bribery was referred to the Police for investigation. No prosecutions resulted.

Complaints by candidates about the VEC's conduct of the State election

The number of complaints received about the VEC's conduct of the election is a 'litmus test' of the VEC's performance.

A total of four complaints were received from candidates or their supporters regarding the VEC's conduct of the 1999 State election (compared with 11 at the 1996 State election).

Of these complaints, one resulted in the initiation of an appeal to the Court of Disputed Returns. On 8 November 1999, Mr Malcolm McClure, a candidate for Melbourne North Province, complained about the actions of the returning officer in having his how-to-vote card withdrawn for a period of time on election day. This, he alleged, prevented him from achieving 4 per cent of the first-preference votes and caused him to lose his deposit. The Electoral Commissioner dismissed Mr McClure's claim for a refund of his deposit, and Mr McClure initiated an appeal to the Court of Disputed Returns, which he later withdrew.

Enrolment

Three-day enrolment period once the election was announced

Once the State election was announced on 24 August 1999, eligible electors had three days to ensure they were on the electoral roll and that their registered address was correct.

The VEC was successful in having television and radio advertisements aired throughout Victoria on the night the election was announced, and newspaper advertising printed over the next two days, ensuring that as many people as possible took the opportunity to check that their enrolment details were correct.

Voters had the opportunity to update their enrolments on the spot at sixty-seven locations throughout the State, or to pick up an enrolment form from any post office. In addition, the VEC web site provided the opportunity to download an enrolment form.

During the three-day period from the issue of writs to the close of rolls, 29,313 new enrolments were received, and 32,381 changes to enrolments occurred, making a total of 61,694 enrolment transactions taking place overall.

The VEC's web site was used by 1,758 electors to download the enrolment form in that three day period.

Enrolment initiatives in the lead-up to the 1999 State election

The VEC initiated a range of enrolment activities in the lead-up to the State election.

Special initiative to encourage 17 and 18-year-olds to enrol

Young people turning 18 years of age—who become eligible to vote for State, Federal and municipal Council elections the first time—are a major focus of all VEC initiatives encouraging enrolment. Seventeen-year-olds who are Australian citizens are also a target audience as they can enrol provisionally, and then they automatically become fully enrolled at the age of 18. There is a strong advantage in enrolling at the age of 17. If a person who has provisionally enrolled at age 17 turns 18 on or before election day they will be able to vote, even if the electoral roll has closed.

The VEC embarked on a special initiative to enrol 17 and 18-year-olds in August 1999.

A request was made to the Board of Studies of the Department of Education for the name, address and date of birth data for young people enrolled in Years 11 and 12 in Victorian secondary schools. The Board agreed to provide the data in view of the priority it places on encouraging young people to enrol and vote at State, Federal and Council elections. The information was provided solely for the purpose of enabling the VEC to write to these young people and invite them to enrol to vote.

From the Board of Studies data the VEC established that only 25 per cent of 18 year old school students had enrolled, and that only 3 per cent of 17-year-olds had provisionally enrolled.

In the week of 9 August 1999 the VEC wrote to all students in Years 11 and 12 aged 17 years and over, providing them with the motivational leaflet, 20 very good reasons to enrol to vote, and inviting them to complete an enclosed enrolment form.

In addition, the VEC continues to send Year 11 and 12 students a birthday card and enrolment information on their seventeenth birthday.

This initiative resulted in 24,824 enrolments by 17 and 18-year-olds prior to the State election (provisional enrolments for 17-year-olds).

As students comprise the majority of 17 and 18-year-olds, this initiative will make a large contribution to increasing the number of young people enrolled to vote in Victoria.

School leavers

Earlier in 1999, in order to reach school leavers, the VEC's advertising agency, Leo Burnett Connaghan and May, created an innovative advertisement to appear in Get a Life! magazine, which was mailed to all school leavers in January 1999. The advertisement also appeared in a new education supplement in The Age newspaper.

The advertisement was later adapted, in the form of a postcard, for distribution in universities during orientation week.

Cinema advertising

Advertising research shows that cinema advertising has a very high reach among young people, especially when targeted to appear before movies that are popular with the late-teens age group. The VEC therefore decided to take advantage of this medium to get its enrolment message across to Victoria's young people.

A cinema advertisement was created based upon the enrolment advertising screened on television for the State election. The cinema advertisement was screened for ten weeks, between February and April 1999, in a range of cinemas across metropolitan and regional Victoria, with films such as Shakespeare in Love, Rush Hour, Meet Joe Black and Paperback Hero.

The VEC's window display at Information Victoria was designed to encourage enrolment during the pre-election period.

Press enrolment advertising targeted to all Victorians

The VEC considered that April was an opportune time to remind all Victorians to ensure that they were enrolled correctly. This was shortly before the earliest date the election could be called.

The enrolment campaign comprised an intense burst of advertising from 27 April to 1 May, with full-page advertisements in all Victorian daily newspapers and thirty-second advertisements on all commercial radio stations.

The campaign resulted in a significant increase in the number of enrolments.

Window display at Information Victoria

In August, the VEC arranged for a window display at Information Victoria to encourage enrolments during the pre-election period. The primary focus of the display was to encourage electors who had moved address to update their enrolment, and to offer elderly or disabled voters the opportunity of registering as a general postal voter.

Other ongoing enrolment initiatives

The VEC had a variety of existing enrolment projects prior to the lead-up to the 1999 State election. These projects are ongoing and aim to keep the roll up-to-date. They include:

(i) Young people obtaining a drivers licence

Under an arrangement with VicRoads, the VEC obtains names and addresses of people in the eighteen to twenty-one age group who have obtained a drivers licence for the first time. The VEC mails out enrolment information and enrolment application forms to those not enrolled at their current addresses.

(ii) People requesting electricity connections and reconnections

The VEC obtains data concerning connections and reconnections by Eastern Energy's domestic electricity customers. When people request an electricity connection or reconnection, they are asked if they would like enrolment assistance from the VEC. If they consent, enrolment information and enrolment application forms are sent to those not enrolled at their current addresses.

(iii) Electronic lodgement and enrolment using maxi

Since 1997, the VEC has provided an electronic method for Victorians to lodge their enrolment details via the internet (www.maxi.com.au) or at public multi-media kiosks.

Further details about these initiatives are provided in the VEC's Annual Report 1998-1999.

Arrangements for voting before election day

The VEC made arrangements for voters who could not get to a polling place on election day.

A total of 276,780 Victorians voted before election day. This is a significantly greater number than at previous State elections (177,361 at the 1996 State election and 185,253 at the 1992 State election).

A reason for the increase may be that the election was held at the beginning of the September school holidays, and on the day of an Australian Football League preliminary final. As well, a number of political parties encouraged postal voting by mailing postal voting application forms on a large scale at the start of the election period.

Voting in person

Voting in person was possible at any of sixty-four locations throughout the State prior to election day. These locations are listed in Appendix 3 of this Report.

Electors could vote between 8.30 am and 5.00 pm from Monday, 6 September until Saturday, 11 September, and from Monday, 13 September until Thursday, 16 September. Voting at these locations was also possible until 6.00 pm on election eve, Friday, 15 September. Offices in Melbourne and East Malvern remained open until 8.00 pm on Thursdays in recognition of sections of the community requiring the opportunity to vote outside business hours, but not on Saturdays.

In most cases the returning officer's office was considered to be appropriately located for the purposes of voting prior to election day. However, additional voting centres were established to supplement returning officer's offices where locations were inconvenient to a large section of voters. These were in Hastings, Korumburra, Melbourne Airport, Portland, Prahlan, Sunbury and Wangaratta.

Additional voting facilities were also established in the ski fields areas of Falls Creek, Mount Buller and Mount Hotham, to provide a service to those who might be skiing in these areas during the school holiday period.

A voting facility was established for staff (mainly country electors) working at the Royal Melbourne Show. The centre operated for three days prior to the opening of the Show. Approximately 300 Show staff made use of this voting facility.

There were 152,559 votes cast at the VEC's election offices prior to election day for the 1999 State election.

Voting at interstate and overseas locations

Voting was possible prior to election day at twelve interstate and thirty-eight overseas locations. These locations are listed in Appendix 4 of this Report.

A total of 17,692 votes were cast at these interstate and overseas locations during the State election. This compares with 9,945 votes cast at the 1996 State election, and 10,669 votes in 1992.

Voting by post

Voters who would not be able to vote at a polling place on election day were able to vote by post by:

- picking up an application form for a postal vote from any post office in Victoria;
- downloading a postal vote application form from the VEC's web site; or
- telephoning the VEC's telephone enquiry service and having an application form posted to them.

There were 112,610 votes cast by post at the 1999 State election. Of the applications received, 6,138 had been downloaded from the VEC's web site. This new facility was considered very successful, given that it was the first time it had been offered at a Victorian State election.

Registered general postal voters

Voters who satisfy certain statutory requirements regarding their ability to vote at a polling place at election time are eligible for registration as general postal voters.

By registering as general postal voters, these people automatically receive ballot papers in the mail for all State elections.

There were 17,452 registered general postal voters at the 1999 State election. This is a significantly greater number than at previous State elections (9,587 at the 1996 State election, and 9,042 at the 1992 State election).

The increase was mainly due to legislative changes increasing eligibility for registration, and initiatives by the VEC and its national counterpart (the Australian Electoral Commission) to increase public awareness of this facility amongst voters who find it difficult to vote at polling places at State and Federal elections.

Voting at special hospitals

The Electoral Commissioner has the power to appoint certain institutions as 'special hospitals' for the purpose of enabling voters in those institutions to vote on the spot when a mobile polling team visits in the lead-up to a State election.

Prior to the 1999 State election, the VEC conducted a review of the election services provided to institutions that were appointed as special hospitals at the 1996 State election.

The VEC contacted the institutions and requested that they consider the type of electoral service that would best meet their residents' requirements. In some cases, the institutions requested that residents be provided with postal voting material as the visit of polling officials caused frail patients to become distressed. There were 108 institutions requesting this facility.

As a result of the review, 431 special hospitals were appointed for the 1999 State election. (These are listed in Appendix 5 of this report.) This compares with 279 locations at the 1996 State election.

There were 11,611 votes cast at special hospitals in the 1999 State election, a substantial increase on the number of votes cast at special hospitals in the 1996 State election (7,261). (Figures are not available for the 1992 State election.)

Antarctic voting

An 'Antarctic elector' is an elector who has made a request under section 218D of The Constitution Act Amendment Act 1958 to be treated as an Antarctic elector while in Antarctica.

At the close of roll for the 1999 Victorian State election, there were fourteen Antarctic voters.

Arrangements for voting on election day

Voting on election day

Voters could vote at any of the 1,616 polling places established throughout Victoria on election day, Saturday, 18 September 1999. Voting took place between 8.00 am and 6.00 pm.

Polling places were advertised in their electoral District groupings. Voters were able to vote at a polling place within their electorate (that is, cast an 'ordinary vote'), or vote at any other polling place in the State outside their electorate by casting an 'absent vote'.

A total of 2,641,766 votes were cast on election day. These included 226,608 absent votes.

The number of absent votes was a significant increase on the number cast at previous State elections (203,908 at the 1996 State election, and 163,358 at the 1992 State election). It is likely that this increase was primarily due to election day being held on the first day of the school holidays, when a number of voters would be away from home.

Assistance for voters from non-English-speaking backgrounds

The VEC advertised information to assist voters from non-English-speaking backgrounds in a range of ethnic media, including newspapers, radio and television (see Appendix 6).

In addition, information regarding how to cast a formal vote was made available in 15 languages at each polling place.

Assistance for disabled voters

The VEC is committed to providing electoral services that provide maximum assistance to enable people with disabilities to vote. In the past, the VEC has implemented procedures such as identifying polling places with the best wheelchair access, providing table-top screens at all polling places, and instructing polling officials to assist disabled electors to vote in the polling place if requested. The VEC also sends postal voting material to all electors who are registered as general postal voters.

Prior to the 1999 State election, the VEC conducted a review of its procedures in order to identify further ways to assist electors with disabilities to participate in the electoral process.

As part of this review, the VEC consulted with a number of organisations representing disabled people in Victoria. The organisations contacted included:

- National Industry Association for Disability Services (ACROD Victoria);
- Action Resource Network;
- Headway Victoria;
- National Federation of Blind Citizens;
- Paraplegic and Quadriplegic Association;
- Regional Victorian Rural Disabilities Association (RVRDA);
- Victorian Advocacy League for Individuals with Disability (VALID);
- Victorian Council of Deaf People Inc; and
- Vision Australia.

The consultative process explored ways the VEC could enhance the delivery of electoral services to further assist people with disabilities. During the review, organisations raised issues and recommended practical solutions that the VEC could implement at the 1999 State election.

As a result of the review, the VEC introduced voting compartments especially designed for wheelchair access, improved signage at polling places for people with sight impairment and instructed polling officials on how to assist people with hearing disabilities.

The review also resulted in the VEC recommending changes to electoral law to enable polling officials to assist disabled voters to vote outside the polling place. Parliament amended The Constitution Act Amendment Act 1958 to include the changes, which took effect in June 1999. The VEC developed new procedures and advised prospective candidates and political parties of the changes prior to the election. All polling officials throughout Victoria were trained in the new procedures and the procedures were implemented at the 1999 State election.

Information to voters

Advertising during the State election period

For the 1999 State election the VEC based the voter information campaign on the campaign used in the 1996 State election.

The 1996 campaign had been evaluated as highly successful—achieving a very high voter turnout rate (94.1 per cent) and an extremely low rate of informal voting (2.3 per cent). An evaluation of the effectiveness of the campaign by AGB McNair showed that the campaign achieved high levels of awareness.

The original campaign was devised by Grey Advertising, and used the strong central theme ‘Your opinion counts. Make sure your vote does’. Television advertisements featured a range of Victorians expressing opinions, followed by messages on how to make your opinion count. Radio advertisements used the voices of the people featured in the television scenarios, and the newspaper advertisements included photographs of the scenarios.

Following a competitive tendering process, the VEC engaged Leo Burnett Connaghan and May to revamp the advertising campaign.

The campaign comprised:

- advice of the issue of the writs, providing the key election dates (press);
- enrolment advertising (television—beginning on the night that the election was announced, radio and press);
- information for candidates about nominating and the registering of how-to-vote cards (press);
- how to vote if you are away on election day (television, radio and press—including advertising in The Australian for voters travelling interstate);
- voting interstate and overseas (leaflet distributed to all major travel agents in Victoria);
- special voting arrangements at Victoria’s ski fields (press);
- know your candidates (press);
- voting correctly (television, radio and press);
- voting for the Ballarat, Melbourne and Melbourne North Province by-elections (press);
- going to the footy—vote before you go (press);
- going to the Show—vote before you go (press);
- where to vote at the State election (lift-out in metropolitan press and large advertisements in regional press);
- election results (press).

A full list of where the VEC placed advertising during the election is provided in Appendix 6. Sample advertisements for the 1999 State election are provided in Appendix 7.

Advertising coverage in rural Victoria

At the 1996 Victorian State election the VEC was criticised for not advertising in smaller weekly newspapers. The VEC had advertised on statewide television and radio, and in statewide and regional daily newspapers.

Following the 1996 State election, the VEC engaged the market research company, AGB McNair, to evaluate the effectiveness of its voter information campaign, with a particular emphasis on rural Victoria. Particular attention was given to those parts of Victoria that did not receive regional daily newspapers. The evaluation showed that rural Victorians were not disadvantaged by the VEC's decision not to advertise in weekly newspapers in rural areas. (See pages 30-31 of the VEC's Report to Parliament on the Administration of the 1996 Victorian State Election.)

During the 1999 State election the VEC received criticism from rural newspaper associations and individual newspapers for not placing advertising in all rural newspapers. Some newspapers thought that one advertisement in particular—advertising arrangements for how to vote before election day—was suited to advertising in all rural newspapers due to its importance and the sufficient lead time for preparation and placement of the advertisement.

The VEC extended advertising beyond that used at the 1996 State election by placing polling place advertisements in all regional daily newspapers and certain rural newspapers which were outside the circulation areas of regional daily newspapers. Previously this advertising had only been placed in The Age and Herald Sun.

The VEC will review its advertising arrangements prior to the next State election.

Information for voters at www.vec.vic.gov.au

The VEC's web site provided valuable information to voters in a readily accessible format. The site included all the information about arrangements for enrolment and voting in the election, as well as providing the opportunity to download an enrolment application form and a postal voting application form. (See the chapter on Information services to the media in this report for details about the design and development of the VEC's web site.)

The VEC's telephone enquiry service

The VEC required a telephone enquiry service (TES) that would be able to deal successfully and efficiently with the large volume of calls that occur during a State election. The TES at previous State elections had not met the demand from the public for information. This had occurred primarily because the VEC does not have the ongoing telecommunication infrastructure nor a large pool of trained staff who can be called on to operate a call centre immediately a State election is announced. In view of these factors, it was decided to outsource this service for the 1999 State election to a commercial call centre provider. Morgan and Banks was selected following a competitive tendering process.

Morgan and Banks established a custom-built call centre at a location near the VEC that had the following key features:

- a 60 seat area allocated to the VEC, with the capacity to expand according to demand. Each workstation had an individual telephone and computer allocated;
- IT infrastructure and support on-site; and
- call centre training specialists.

The TES database was created using data provided by the VEC and was developed into a simple menu based look-up screen product.

Morgan and Banks managed the recruitment process for the establishment of the TES. Some 160 staff were selected and were provided with customised training in consultation with VEC staff. The VEC provided supervisors to ensure that all requests for information were handled correctly. At the announcement of the election, some 140 staff were available to work and to be allocated across the various shifts.

The service initially operated over a 24 hour period which was later reduced to operating between 7.00 am and 8.00 pm, as there were very few calls after 8.00 pm each day. The weekend hours were 8.00 am to 6.00 pm. The performance of the TES is discussed in the performance summary contained in this chapter.

Information services for voters from non-English-speaking backgrounds

The VEC is aware of the need to provide information to voters from non-English-speaking backgrounds. The voter information campaign for the State election included advertisements in 18 ethnic newspapers, on five ethnic radio stations and on two ethnic television channels, advertising in a total of eleven languages. The proportion of the voter information campaign budget spent on ethnic advertising was well above the five per cent minimum required by government policy.

Advertising in both the ethnic media and in the English-language press referred people needing more information to the VEC's multi-lingual telephone enquiry service. The service was provided by Victorian Interpreting and Translating Services (VITS). VITS provided pre-recorded messages on a range of election matters in twelve languages other than English. Callers dialling a language-specific number heard a message in their own language on the subject of their choice, such as enrolment, postal voting, or how to vote correctly. If they needed more information after listening to the message they were put through to an interpreter, who in turn connected to the VEC's mainstream telephone enquiry service for a conference call. People calling the advertised number for all other languages were connected directly to an interpreter and the VEC's mainstream service. In addition, the mainstream telephone enquiry service included a number of bilingual staff. Telephone enquiry services for non-English speaking voters worked much better than at previous elections, when it had been difficult to establish conference calls. Over the 25 day election period the multi-lingual enquiry service received a total of 6,218 calls, of which 1,936 were calls connected to an interpreter.

Hamish and his guide dog Jason at the VEC's telephone enquiry centre.

Information services for voters with a visual impairment

The VEC commissioned Vision Australia Foundation to recommend an approach to assist those electors who are visually impaired or blind.

The recommended approach was to produce audiocassettes containing information about the arrangements for the State election. Approximately 6,200 audiocassettes were distributed by Vision Australia Foundation to Victorian voters. Of these, some 5,725 were distributed to individuals with print disabilities. The remaining cassettes were distributed to blindness agencies and Vision Australia branches.

This service was supported by a successful media campaign including media releases and campaigns on 3RPH (Radio Print Handicapped). The Electoral Commissioner was interviewed on 3RPH regarding the service being offered to print handicapped voters. Over 200 audiocassettes were distributed to individuals in response to publicity through the media (including 3RPH).

Non-voter follow-up

The enforcement of compulsory voting at Victorian State elections is governed by Division 21 of The Constitution Act Amendment Act 1958 and Part 9 of the Victorian Parliamentary Elections Regulations 1999.

The VEC's election management system, EMS 2000, was used to streamline the processing of the non-voter database for the purposes of excusing voters providing a valid reason for not voting, and for the service of notices to apparent non-voters.

The number of electors who did not vote at the 1999 State election was 211,792. Pursuant to section 271A of the Act, electors who fell into certain categories were not sent failure to vote notices. Such electors included those who had provided a valid and sufficient excuse to returning officers or the VEC during or after the election period, and those electors who were over 70 years of age, deceased, absent from Victoria on election day or itinerant.

Of the 211,792 electors who did not vote, 115,949 were sent non-voter notices. The majority of these provided satisfactory reasons for not voting. However, 29,468 were issued with penalty notices, and, as at the end of April 2000, only 5,203 had paid the required penalty.

The non-payment of penalties for failure to vote has been a continuing problem at State elections. The VEC is considering ways to improve the enforcement of penalty payments.

The maximum fine for not voting at a State election is $50. The penalty for not voting at the 1999 State election was fixed at $40, the same as at the previous State election.

The VEC's performance in providing services to voters

Voter turnout

Voter turnout at the State election (held in a school holiday period) was 93.23 per cent. This is slightly below the turnout of 94.08 per cent at the 1996 State election, but close to the long term average for Victorian State elections (93.61 per cent for the seven elections held since 1979.)

Rate of informal voting

The rate of informal voting was 3.02 per cent, compared with 2.30 per cent at the 1996 State election and 3.81 per cent at the 1992 State election. The comparatively low rate of informal voting at the 1996 State election is thought to be because that election was held only a few weeks after the Federal election, and the messages about voting correctly were fresh in voters' minds. The rate of informal voting in 1999 was very close to the long term average for Victorian State elections (3.05 per cent for the seven elections held since 1979.)

Enrolment

The total enrolment at the 1999 State election was 3,130,338, compared with 3,000,076 at the 1996 State election. An analysis of recent enrolment trends in Victoria is provided in the VEC's Annual Report 1998-1999 (pp 20-23).

Voter satisfaction survey

The VEC engaged ACNielsen to conduct a telephone survey of voters following the 1999 State election. The purpose of the survey was to ascertain voters' satisfaction with the services provided by the VEC to assist them during the election.

The survey covered voters in Melbourne, regional centres and rural areas, as well as voters who voted before election day in person or by post, and voters who cast ordinary and absent votes on election day. Interviews took place from 22 October until 1 November 1999.

Overall, there was a very high level of satisfaction with the way in which the VEC conducted the 1999 State election, with 94 per cent of voters reporting being satisfied or very satisfied with the VEC's arrangements and performance.

Arrangements for voting before election day

Eighty-eight per cent of voters who voted before election day, either in person or by post, reported being satisfied or very satisfied with the arrangements made by the VEC.

Almost all (97 per cent) of these voters considered that the pre-polling centres were suitably located.

Arrangements for voting on election day

Ninety-seven per cent of voters who voted at a polling place on election day were satisfied or very satisfied with the helpfulness of the VEC's polling place staff.

Almost all (97 per cent) considered that the location of polling places was convenient.

Ninety per cent of absentee voters reported being satisfied or very satisfied with the efficiency and effectiveness of the arrangements made for absentee voting by the VEC.

Awareness of advertising

The VEC's voter information campaign for the State election was assessed by Leeds Media to have reached the following proportions of Victorians over 18 years of age:

Television	90.7%
Newspapers	88.5%
Radio	84.7%

These exposure rates are considered to be very high for any advertising campaign.

The satisfaction survey of voters confirmed a very high voter awareness of the VEC's advertising for the 1999 State election. Seventy-four per cent of voters were aware of the VEC's advertising regarding such matters as who was eligible to vote, and arrangements for voting before and on election day. This was a considerable improvement on the level of advertising awareness following the 1996 State election (64 per cent).

The age group most successfully reached was 25-39 years (79 per cent awareness), followed by 40-54 years (74 per cent); 18-24 years (72 per cent); and 55 years and over (69 per cent).

Television was the most successful advertising medium, with 70 per cent of voters who reported being aware of the VEC's advertising having seen television advertising. Fifty-three per cent of the voters who were aware of the VEC's advertising had heard radio advertising and 30 per cent had seen newspaper advertising.

Amongst voters who recalled VEC advertising, all messages were conveyed effectively, with at least three-quarters of voters evaluating the advertising for each message as effective or very effective in providing them with all the information they needed.

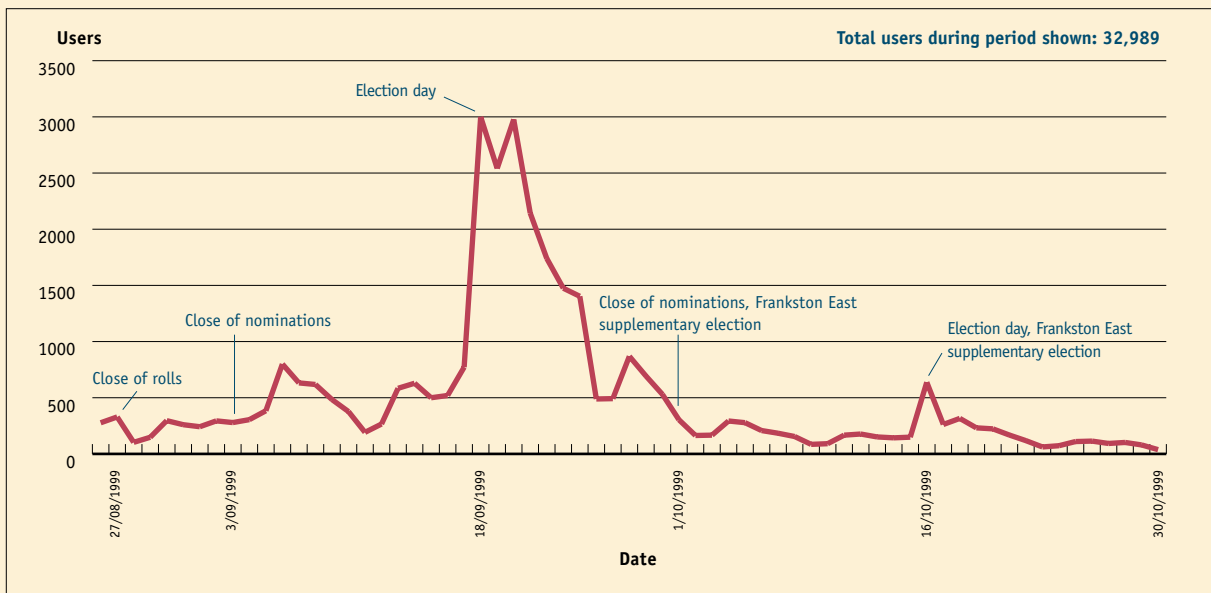

Use of the VEC's web site during the State election

The web site was accessed by a total of 32,989 users over the 66 day period covering the State election and the Frankston East supplementary election. (A user is anyone who visits the web site at least once. Each user has a separate identifier to ensure that the user is not counted more than once per day. As many organisations use internet gateways that mask hostnames, the number of users identified here is quite conservative.)

A profile of the usage of the web site over this period is provided in the chart below.

One per cent of voters surveyed by ACNielsen reported using the VEC's web site to gain information before the election, with 83 per cent of these being satisfied with the information provided. The use of web sites to gain electoral information will no doubt increase in line with the broader community use of web sites.

Effectiveness of the VEC's telephone enquiry service

The performance of the telephone enquiry service was a considerable improvement on the service provided at the 1996 State election. A record number of calls were answered due to the capacity of the telephone enquiry service to expand according to demand. A comparative summary between the 1996 and 1999 state elections is presented below.

The vast majority of calls (over 80 per cent) were questions about enrolment or pre-poll and postal voting arrangements. In simple terms, 'How do I get on the roll or check my enrolment details?' and 'How do I vote if I am unable to vote on election day?', were the main concerns of Victorian voters. The remaining 20 per cent of calls were about the location of polling places and general questions about voting and the election. There were very few calls about nomination matters (1.27 per cent), indicating that returning officers and the VEC were satisfactorily answering nomination questions directly.

Effectiveness of the VEC's telephone enquiry service

Election	Number of calls received	Number of calls answered	Left after message	Abandoned
1996	139,553*	45,346	6,371	87,836
		32.49%	4.57%	62.94%
1999	71,696	67,945	3,392	359
		94.77%	4.73%	0.50%

* The number of calls received in 1996 was much greater because the TES operated during the Federal and Council elections, which were held within the period of the State election.

Of voters surveyed by ACNielsen following the State election, only 3 per cent reported using the VEC's telephone enquiry service. Of these, more than 80 per cent reported being satisfied with the service.

Complaints about services to voters

The VEC received a total of 37 written complaints about its services to voters. This compares very favourably with the total of 45 complaints received by the VEC about the conduct of the 1996 State election. The 37 complaints received in 1999 comprised:

- Seventeen complaints from postal voters who had not received ballot papers. In each case, the VEC explained the arrangements it had in place for the daily mailout of ballot papers.
- Thirteen complaints about voting facilities and access to voting. These included complaints about polling places, special hospital facilities and signage.
- Seven complaints about the VEC's conduct of the election.

Information kit

The Information Kit for the 1999/2000 Victorian State Election was prepared during 1998/99 to assist the media in providing Victorians with accurate and timely electoral information.

The kit was distributed widely to media organisations, registered political parties, members of Parliament and other interested persons during June 1999.

The following stakeholders were consulted in January 1999:

- political journalists from major daily newspapers (The Age, Herald Sun, The Australian, The Australian Financial Review);
- journalists from AAP (State rounds);
- television political journalists (ABC TV, Channel 7 and Channel 9);
- political scientists (Monash University);
- the State Library;
- Victorian Parliamentary Library (for MPs' requirements);
- the Australian Electoral Commission Electoral Education Centre;
- the Victorian Department of Education; and
- new voters.

The revised kit comprised:

- status reports including a list of current members of the Legislative Assembly and Legislative Council, by-elections since the 1996 State election, swings required for seats to change hands at the next State election, and a list of registered political parties;
- fact sheets that were revised to incorporate changes to electoral legislation in June 1999;
- a new section that statistically ranked electorates on a range of descriptive variables; and
- electoral District profiles and a new section of electoral Province profiles. The profiles were revised to include a demographic profile of each electorate, which can be compared with the State average.

The VEC's web site: www.vec.vic.gov.au

The VEC's web site initially focused on providing information relating to parliamentary elections—specifically the 1999 State election and any parliamentary by-elections.

The first stage in the development of the site was to consult with representatives of the VEC's major stakeholders regarding the content and design features they would find useful in an electoral internet site.

The web site was designed for use during four distinct timeframes:

Non-election mode: containing information of a general and historical nature, to be used primarily by librarians, students and new voters;

Election mode: from the time of the issue of the writs until election night, providing information specific to the election. This mode is designed to be used primarily by journalists, students and experienced voters;

Election night mode: providing election night results in 'real time' for all electorates and the State as a whole, to be used primarily by journalists and voters; and

Post-election mode: providing results updates as postal and absent votes are included after election night, and results of any rechecks, preference distributions and recounts. This information is primarily used by journalists.

It was recognised at an early stage that the site would be an information site that would need to give quick and easy access to a broad range of material.

Admiral Computing developed the web site using design specifications provided by The Hiser Group.

The web site was launched on 7 July 1999.

Media releases, media interviews and special features in the media

The VEC was keen to make good use of the media at the 1999 State election to present clear messages to voters, to promote a greater understanding of electoral processes, to respond to any issues arising and to ensure public confidence in all aspects of the electoral process. The VEC appointed Hill and Knowlton, a public relations company, to assist with this work.

The VEC produced a number of media releases during the 1999 State election and the Frankston East supplementary election and these are listed in Appendix 8.

In addition, the Electoral Commissioner, Deputy Electoral Commissioner and the VEC's two public information spokespersons held a number of interviews with television, radio and newspaper journalists, including:

- television journalists (on State election night): ABC TV and Channel 10;
- radio journalists: 3LO, 3AW, 3MMM, FOX FM, GOLD FM, 3BO (Bendigo), 3RPH (Radio Print Handicapped); and
- newspaper journalists: Herald Sun, The Age, The Australian, The Australian Financial Review and The Melbourne Weekly.

Interview topics included:

- the VEC's initiatives to encourage young people to enrol;
- the computerisation of State election processes;
- enrolling for the State election;
- voting arrangements for the State election;
- special voting arrangements for snow-skiers;

- arrangements for the tally room and the provision of election results;
- counting in the District of Geelong; and
- circumstances leading to the Frankston East supplementary election and election arrangements.

The VEC was successful in encouraging newspaper features on youth enrolment initiatives, electoral education initiatives, and the computerisation of State election processes. Copies of the resulting newspaper features are included in Appendix 9.

Media enquiries

The VEC's spokespersons were available to respond to all media enquiries. Most political journalists already knew the VEC's spokespersons through contact at previous elections. An effort was made to ensure that all media enquiries were responded to in a timely manner and that helpful responses were provided.

The tally room

The focus of media attention on election night is the tally room. A considerable challenge for the VEC is finding an available venue that is able to accommodate the construction of a tally board, four television studio sets, radio and print media areas, and seating for the general public. This is particularly difficult without knowing in advance the date on which the election will be held. It is therefore necessary to monitor the bookings in the small number of suitable venues over the twelve-month period during which the election could be held.

The venues identified by the VEC as being suitable for a tally room were the Melbourne Exhibition Centre; the Melbourne Sports and Entertainment Centre; the Showgrounds Exhibition Centre; and the Royal Exhibition Buildings.

The Melbourne Exhibition Centre was available for use as the tally room for 18 September 1999, election night for the 1999 State election.

Public attendance at the tally room—for the first time, provided a focal point for media coverage on election night. The Herald and Weekly Times photographic collection.

Results were transmitted in real time to the tally room through the VEC's computerised election management system (EMS 2000). The results were transmitted to printers at the tally room for posting directly on to the tally board. EMS 2000 also provided a direct data feed to television media, AAP, and political parties in attendance on the night.

The tally room was attended by major media organisations including:

- Nine, Seven, Ten and ABC television networks;
- 3LO, 3AW, Triple MMM, and Triple RRR radio stations; and
- all major Victorian and national print media.

The tally room was also attended by representatives of the National and Liberal parties.

For the first time the VEC invited the public to attend the tally room on election night. Newspaper advertisements were placed and 400 respondents were provided with passes. Large television monitors were provided to enable the public to follow television coverage within the atmosphere of the tally room. This initiative was considered to be extremely successful—there were very few empty seats and most members of the public stayed throughout the evening until nearly all results were available. A number of media commented positively on the extra atmosphere provided by a public presence.

Prior to election night the VEC had raised the possibility of the tally room for the 1999 State election being the last. With election results now capable of being transmitted directly to the media and to the public via the VEC's web site, it was considered that there was no longer a requirement for a special venue for the posting of election results.

Feedback received by the VEC suggests that the media would like to retain the tally room at future elections as an atmospheric focal point for their election night coverage. The VEC will review this matter prior to the next State election.

Electronic transmission of results to the media

Election results were transmitted electronically to television media and some print media representatives located in the tally room.

The VEC provided a direct feed of results to each network. Data was transferred directly to the television outlets as it was keyed into the VEC's election management system at the VEC's returning officers' offices.

In May 1999, the VEC had provided the television networks with the opportunity to participate in an election night trial. Channels 2, 7 and 9 took part in this trial, held at the VEC store at Maribyrnong, which proved very successful.

Media outlets and other interested parties were also given the opportunity to receive the latest results via email on election night. Pre-formatted result reports were emailed directly from the VEC's election management system to these outlets at half hourly intervals until the close of counting on election night.

An historical display at the tally room on election night marked the last State election of the twentieth century.

Complaints about the media

During the course of the State election the VEC received a total of six complaints about the media. In two of these cases the VEC took action to ensure that legislative requirements for the authorisation of advertising were complied with on future occasions.

The VEC's performance in providing services to the media

The VEC's contracted public relations company, Hill and Knowlton, undertook a survey of media to evaluate the information services provided. A total of twenty journalists from the television, radio and print media were identified for interview. Hill and Knowlton interviewed 13 journalists in the period immediately following the Frankston East supplementary election.

Overall, journalists found that the VEC was easy to contact, willing to be available to the media and provided valuable information in a timely manner. VEC personnel were considered to be very professional.

The election information kits given to media representatives were variously described as 'excellent', 'terrific', 'easy to read' and 'well indexed'. All appreciated having a hard-copy version for ease of access and transportability. A small number of journalists thought the kit was too detailed.

The VEC's news releases provided useful facts and information and the quality of the information was seen to be of a high standard.

The VEC's spokespersons were praised for their availability, responsiveness and for the information they provided. The VEC's efforts to be pro-active and aware of pressing media deadlines were appreciated.

The VEC's web site received very positive feedback. One respondent wanted more information on the web site. There were comments about the web site not being completely up-to-date in the period immediately following election day.

There was very strong support for the way the tally room provides an atmosphere and exists as 'a public demonstration of democracy'. Journalists noted that they found the tally room a useful venue for the exchange of information and ideas, and expressed concern that it should not become 'virtual'. Services and the provision of election results at the tally room were very positively received.

In a survey of the three parliamentary parties, one party was strongly supportive of the tally room and saw it as an important part of the electoral education process. The other two parties were not committed to using or maintaining the tally room.

Recruitment and training of senior election officials

In early 1998 the VEC undertook a large-scale recruitment program to develop its network of senior election officials (SEOs). This followed the retirement in 1997 of fifty-six SEOs. There were 108 new recruits selected through this process.

The VEC conducted extensive training of SEOs in preparation for the earliest possible election date (12 June 1999) and subsequent refresher training during August 1999 in order that SEOs were ready to conduct the State election when called.

SEOs were trained so that they could conduct the parliamentary election impartially and according to law. Manuals were developed to support all areas of training. The pool of 196 SEOs completed up to seven two-day training seminars at the VEC. The training covered election procedures and effective use of the VEC's newly developed election management system (EMS 2000).

Support for the VEC's returning officers

Parliamentary election officers

Three parliamentary election officers (PEOs) provided support for the VEC's fifty-four returning officers during the course of the State election. The PEOs were located at the VEC's Melbourne office and provided support to returning officers on procedural issues. Their communication with returning officers was via phone, email and fax.

In addition, three parliamentary liaison officers travelled across the State providing face-to-face support to returning officers as required in their offices.

Help desk

Six help desk operators provided first line support for returning officers in the operation of the VEC's computerised EMS 2000. They assisted ROs with the operation of EMS 2000 and referred technical issues to the VEC's technical support staff.

Employment of staff at returning officers' offices

Returning officers were responsible for recruiting clerical staff to work in their offices. To assist them in this task the VEC developed job specifications to assess potential candidates and to ensure that equal employment opportunity (EEO) principles were considered in the selection of all staff. Many returning officers, in areas with large numbers of people from culturally diverse backgrounds, were able to employ multi-lingual staff. For example, the returning officer for Springvale employed three staff fluent in both Vietnamese and Chinese, as the Springvale electorate has large Vietnamese and Chinese speaking populations.

A recruitment company was engaged to provide returning officers with suitable staff if required. The company was provided with job specifications to ensure that staff recruited would meet the VEC's requirements.

Employment of polling officials

Polling officials were recruited by returning officers for employment on election day in polling places throughout the returning officers' electorates.

Returning officers recruited polling officials who had worked at previous elections and from applications received by the VEC. These applications were sorted by electoral District and distributed to the relevant returning officers.

Polling officials were assessed by polling place managers after election day for their suitability for future engagement.

The VEC's Zoë Dutton and Laila Lacić, and Bronwyn Coles from Hill and Knowlton relax at the tally room after it's all over.

Measures to ensure impartiality

In 1995, the VEC obtained an exemption under the Equal Opportunity Act 1984 to take into account whether those seeking employment hold political beliefs or views or engage in political activities. This enabled the VEC to advertise for and employ suitable, politically impartial people for its work. The exemption applies to the employment of all those involved in the 'front line' of State and Council elections conducted by the VEC, from returning officers to polling officials.

The VEC's performance in this area has been exemplary. There have been no legal proceedings before the courts alleging bias by returning officers or election officials in the conduct of their duties in relation to parliamentary elections over the last ten year period. There has been no instance of the VEC, its returning officers or election officials being involved in any breach of the Equal Opportunity Act in relation to any employment matter over the last ten year period.

Payment of VEC personnel

The payroll system used for the payment of clerical staff and polling officials employed at the State election was administered by a payroll company using employee data provided through EMS 2000. The VEC maintained its centralised record system on EMS 2000 to ensure obligations regarding employment records were met and to assist the VEC in answering any enquiries it received from employees.

The payroll process provided payments to staff through direct banking. This was more efficient for staff and also eliminated the costs involved in cheque payments. This process ensured that approximately 16,000 casual employees and polling officials who worked at the State election were paid within a week of the payroll company receiving information extracted from EMS 2000.

The system also provided for the production of group certificates and special reports for the VEC.

The VEC's performance in preparing its key employees for the State election

As part of the review of its performance at the State election, the VEC conducts debriefing sessions with returning officers throughout the State in the period following the State election.

A survey of polling place managers was also conducted. A random sample of 300 polling place managers were sent a questionnaire to seek their assessment of the training, support and infrastructure provided by the VEC.

The results of the survey were very favourable, with the vast majority of polling place managers being very satisfied with the training programs and materials provided.

Polling place managers found the VEC's election advertising to be effective in informing voters about the election arrangements. The conduct of absent voting was an area identified for further training by returning officers in order to minimise the potential for polling official error.

Counting the votes and the return of the writs

Counting the votes and the return of the writs

Counting the votes

Once voting finished on election night, Saturday, 18 September 1999, each polling place was locked and the votes counted on the spot. All ordinary first-preference votes (votes cast by voters voting at polling places in their own electorate) were counted for the Legislative Assembly and the Legislative Council.

After the counting of first-preference votes, a two-candidate-preferred count was conducted, whereby preferences were distributed to the two candidates considered most likely to be in the lead after the distribution of preferences. The purpose of the two-candidate-preferred count is to estimate an early picture of the likely result in each electorate, and is for information purposes only. (The candidates included in the two-candidate-preferred count are selected by the Electoral Commissioner before election day.)

After election night, absent votes (votes cast at polling places outside voters' own electorates on election day) and votes cast either in person or by post before election day were counted.

Rechecks and preference distributions were undertaken in electorates where no candidate obtained more than 50 per cent of the first preference votes.

The counting of votes at the 1999 State election involved counting votes for eighty-eight Districts, twenty-two Provinces and three Province by-elections, during which there were a total of:

- 30 rechecks;
- 27 preference distributions; and
- 2 recounts (Geelong District and Gippsland Province).

Processing declaration votes

Declaration votes are made by voters who vote outside their own District as absent or postal voters or by voters whose name cannot be found on the electoral roll when they attend a polling place in their own District to vote. The voter must provide details of their entitlement to vote and their ballot papers are not admitted to the count unless their entitlement is confirmed.

In the case of absent and most postal votes, assessment of whether the vote should be admitted to the count is initially undertaken by the returning officer for the District where the vote is claimed. The vast majority of absent and postal votes are admitted at this stage. If the returning officer is unable to determine entitlement, the vote is referred to the VEC for final checking. Voters whose names cannot be found on the roll when they attend to vote in their own district cast an unenrolled vote. All unenrolled votes are referred to the VEC for central processing.

In the 1999 state election, 57,650 declaration votes (26,762 unenrolled votes, 29,206 absent votes and 1,682 postal votes) were centrally checked by the VEC over seven days, compared with 47,644 votes at the 1996 State election. Thirty-three per cent of declaration votes referred to the VEC for central processing were finally admitted to the count.

The return of the writs

The writs for the State election were returned on Thursday, 30 September 1999 to His Excellency, the Governor, Sir James Gobbo, AC. They were returned twelve days after election day, which was a record for the return of the writs after a State election.

Frankston East supplementary election and Province by-elections

Frankston East supplementary election

Background

A supplementary election was required in the Frankston East electoral District due to the death, during the election, of the sitting Member and candidate, Mr Peter McLellan, MP.

The supplementary election was held on 16 October 1999.

The key dates for the supplementary election were:

Issue of writ	21 September 1999
Close of roll	27 August 1999 (same date as the State election)
Close of nominations	12 noon, 1 October 1999
Election day	16 October 1999
Return of writ	on or before 29 October 1999

Conduct of the supplementary election

The election was conducted from the same premises used for the State election. Voting arrangements and the number of polling places were the same as for the State election, except that voters could not vote outside the electorate on election day (as absent voters).

A near-record sixteen candidates nominated for the election.

The key dates for the registration of how-to-vote (HTV) cards were:

- submission to the returning officer: 4 October to 12 noon, 7 October 1999; and
- submission by registered political parties to the Electoral Commissioner: 2 October to 12 noon, 9 October 1999.

Thirty-eight HTV cards were registered for the supplementary election.

Voters unable to vote at a polling place on election day could vote beforehand at the returning officer's office, or at the VEC's office in Melbourne or by post. There were eleven polling places throughout the District on election day.

Voter information campaign

An enrolment campaign was not required as, by law, the roll was the same as that used at the 1999 State election held four weeks earlier.

Advertising for the supplementary election included information for candidates (press), as well as voting arrangements (radio, press, and a leaflet mailed to all voters on the roll).

Media centre

As State and national media interest intensified nearer to the election date, the VEC considered that it should respond to requests to provide a media focus for election night by establishing a media centre.

An area adjacent to the returning officer's office provided an ideal venue for the media centre, and a tally board was constructed to show progressive first-preference results.

On election night, ABC Radio 3LO, 3AW, ABC TV and Channel 9 presented live crosses to the media centre.

In addition to the summary information presented on the tally board, a series of detailed printed results bulletins were provided to the media attending the media centre. These bulletins listed progressive first-preference and two-candidate-preferred results by polling place. The first results bulletin was provided at about 7 pm, and the last at about 10 pm, with clear indications of the result and swing being evident by about 8 pm.

Feedback received from the media indicated that the media centre and the provision of results bulletins on election night were well received.

Voter participation and rate of informal voting

The voter turnout for the supplementary election was 92.95 per cent. This compares very favourably with the voter turnout of 93.23 per cent for the State election.

The rate of informal voting at the supplementary election was 4.77 per cent.

ABC Radio's Michael Rowland was one of a number of journalists to attend the media centre established for the Frankston East supplementary election.

By-elections for Ballarat Province, Melbourne Province and Melbourne North Province

On 24 August 1999 writs were issued for three by-elections to be held simultaneously with the State election.

The by-elections were required for:

Ballarat Province—due to the resignation of the Hon Rob Knowles, MLC;

Melbourne Province—due to the resignation of the Hon Barry Pullen, MLC; and

Melbourne North Province—due to the resignation of the Hon Caroline Hogg, MLC.

The key dates for the Province by-elections were the same as for the 1999 State election.

Special arrangements were required for the by-elections to avoid any voter confusion which might result from voters in these Provinces receiving three ballot papers.

In addition to the white ballot paper for the Legislative Assembly and pink ballot paper for the Legislative Council for the State election, voters were given a yellow ballot paper for the by-elections being held in these Provinces.

Advertisements were placed in The Age, Herald Sun, Ballarat Courier and appropriate suburban newspapers to explain these arrangements.

The table below shows the first-preference votes at the three by-elections.

The voter turnout rates for the by-elections were very similar to those for these Provinces in the State election. The informal voting rates in the by-elections (and for these Provinces in the State election) were somewhat higher than in the 1996 State election, suggesting that a small number of voters were confused by having three ballot papers to complete instead of two.

	Ballarat	Melbourne	Melbourne North	Total
Enrolment	133,541	152,440	142,672	428,653
Formal votes	121,751	131,008	125,654	378,413
Informal Votes	3,631	5,555	6,798	15,984

Recommendations for legislative change

Recommendations for legislative change

A number of significant changes were made to Victoria's electoral law when Parliament passed The Constitution Act Amendment (Amendment) Act 1999 in April 1999, and these changes made a positive contribution to the conduct of the 1999 State election. The implementation of the amendments was reported on earlier in this report.

Victoria's electoral law is contained in The Constitution Act Amendment Act 1958 (the Act). At the conclusion of a State election, it is appropriate to inform the Parliament of further areas that are in need of legislative change.

Rewrite of Victoria's electoral legislation

Victoria needs coherent electoral legislation written in plain English. The Act has not been thoroughly reviewed since 1958, yet in the intervening period (some 42 years), it has been amended on numerous occasions. The result is that Victoria's electoral legislation has a number of deficiencies: it is extremely prescriptive in some areas and lacking in detail in other key areas; it is written in difficult language; and it does not provide for modern election management practices.

It is now necessary for a complete review of electoral legislation so that it is easy for candidates and other election stakeholders to understand, without having to seek legal advice; is consistent in prescribing procedures; and provides for modern management practices and the use of technology in the administration of parliamentary elections.

I will be recommending to the Attorney-General a major review of Victoria's electoral legislation during the term of the present Parliament.

During the 1999 State election the following specific areas of electoral law came under question and have become priorities for legislative change.

Only those electors who are enrolled and live in the electorate should be entitled to vote in an election

A cornerstone of an electoral system based on multiple, geographically defined electorates is that only those electors who are enrolled and continue to live in the electorate should be permitted to vote for that electorate.

Current electoral law provides that an elector who changes address must enrol at their new address one month after changing address. In practice, however, if an elector does not change their enrolment to the new address, and the elector's name remains on the electoral roll for their 'old' address, then the elector will vote in the 'old' electorate. This is the case even though the elector may have long since left the electorate.

Prior to 1988, Victoria's electoral legislation was clear in cases where electors no longer lived at the address for which they were enrolled. If they moved to an address within the same District, they were entitled to vote in the electorate where they were previously enrolled. If they moved to an address outside the District, within three months of election day, they were permitted to vote. If they moved to an address outside the District more than three months before election day they were not permitted to vote.

In 1988 the section of the Act dealing with this matter was amended in line with similar amendments to Commonwealth legislation made in the same year.

The amendment removed the requirement that a polling official make further enquiries of an elector whose present address is different to their enrolled address.

Exercising the right to vote.

It also removed the three-month provision mentioned above. At the time of making the amendment, there was insufficient consideration given to the effect that it would have on the important principle that only those electors who are enrolled and live in the electorate should be permitted to vote for candidates in that electorate.

The previous Electoral Commissioner twice reported to Parliament on this issue but the deficiency has not been corrected.

As matters stand, an elector who has long since left an electorate, but who remains on the electoral roll for that electorate, will in practice vote in the wrong electorate.

It is recommended that the deficiency be corrected.

Qualification to be a candidate

It is necessary to put beyond doubt that a person who wishes to be a candidate at an election must be enrolled as at the close of roll for the election. During the 1999 State election there was a view that a person did not need to be enrolled at the close of the roll for the election in order to be a candidate at the election. The legislation should state this matter clearly.

Death of a candidate on election day

On election day at the 1999 State election, the Electoral Commissioner was advised that a candidate had died. There was no precedent for this having ever occurred in Victoria's electoral history.

The Electoral Commissioner's view was that in these circumstances Victoria's electoral law required the election be declared a 'failed election' and a fresh election (called a supplementary election) be held. Prior to making the decision to direct polling officials to stop issuing ballot papers for the relevant electorate (Frankston East District), the Electoral Commissioner sought advice from the Victorian Government Solicitor. The Victorian Government Solicitor confirmed the Electoral Commissioner's view on what was required.

The legislation needs to be amended to clearly specify that if a candidate dies at any time between the close of nominations and the close of voting on election day the election will have failed and a new election will be required.

Web sites

Victoria's electoral legislation was drafted long before web sites were a part of modern communication.

There is presently no specific provision for the authorisation of web sites that may contain candidates' or parties' election material. The Act needs to provide for the authorisation of web sites that contain election material. There also needs to be appropriate legislation that deals with the downloading of election material from a web site, and the possible further distribution and printing of material sourced from a web site.

'Oral postal voting' to be replaced with 'pre-poll voting'

Currently Victoria's electoral law provides for electors who meet certain qualifications to vote in person before election day at a returning officer's office. This type of voting is termed 'oral postal voting'. The term 'oral postal voting' is confusing, and should be replaced with the term 'pre-poll voting'.

There are statutory qualifications that an elector is required to satisfy in order to be eligible for an 'oral postal vote'. These relate to an elector's reasons for not being able to vote at a polling place on election day. It is difficult to enforce these statutory qualifications as electors believe that they can vote as of right before election day, and many electors go to considerable effort to attend a returning officer's office before election day in order to vote in this way. The legislation should be amended to reflect electors' changing life styles and to provide for pre-poll voting as of right. Pre-poll voting as of right is already provided for in local government elections in Victoria.

‘Special hospitals’ to be appointed as ‘pre-poll voting centres’

The legislation currently provides for certain institutions (hospitals, nursing homes and convalescent homes) to be appointed by the Electoral Commissioner as ‘special hospitals’. When so appointed returning officers make arrangements to provide voting to the residents. Depending on the nature of the institution, the voting facility may be a fixed polling booth or a mobile voting service to the bedside of electors.

The term ‘special hospital’ should be removed from the legislation and be encompassed within the term ‘pre-poll voting centre’, and special hospital appointments by the Electoral Commissioner should be encompassed within provisions for the appointment of pre-poll voting centres (as recommended above). The returning officer should have the discretion as to whether the institution requires a pre-poll voting service (where residents are capable of attending a polling booth set up in the institution), or whether mobile polling is more appropriate.

Scrutiny of envelopes containing postal ballot papers

Presently the law requires a returning officer to inspect the postmark on the envelope containing postal ballot papers and, if the postmark includes a date after polling day, disallow the vote. This has the unwanted effect of disallowing postal votes that may have been posted on the Friday before election day or on election day, as Australia Post does not postmark mail processed on a Saturday. Such mail is postmarked on the Sunday or the following Monday.

The law should be amended to require the returning officer to use the date when the postal declaration was witnessed as the basis for determining whether the elector had voted prior to the close of the poll.

Review offences and penalties

There needs to be a review of the offences and the associated penalties under the Act. One example that regularly surfaces at elections is the offence of ‘treating’. The question that arises is whether a barbecue or a sausage sizzle paid for by a candidate constitutes ‘treating’. Legal advice has suggested barbecues or sausage sizzles would be most unlikely to come within the meaning of ‘treating’. This issue arises at almost every election and it is now time to make clear which activities or inducements are considered to be ‘treating’.

The penalties for conviction of offences are in desperate need of review. In some cases there is no prescribed penalty for conviction and in other cases the penalty does not match the seriousness of the offence. For example, there is no statutory penalty for conviction on an indictable offence. In other cases the penalty for conviction is a $100 fine.

Summary results

Changes in Parliament

Twenty-five members of the previous Parliament (seventeen members of the Legislative Assembly and eight members of the Legislative Council) did not contest the 1999 State election.

The members standing down from Parliament included two members of the Legislative Council who resigned before the expiry of their terms. In addition, another member of the Legislative Council resigned before the end of his term and stood unsuccessfully for the Legislative Assembly. Ten of the retiring members belonged to the Australian Labor Party, thirteen to the Liberal Party and two to the National Party. The members who did not recontest included the former Minister for Education, the Hon Phil Gude, the former Treasurer, the Hon Alan Stockdale, eight other former Ministers, the Hons Geoff Coleman, Caroline Hogg, Bill McGrath, Barry Pullen, Tom Reynolds, Ian Smith, Marie Tehan and Jan Wade, and the former Speaker of the Legislative Assembly, the Hon Jim Plowman.

Of the eighty-eight Parliamentarians who did stand at the State election, seventy-three were re-elected, fourteen were defeated and one (the independent member for Frankston East District, Mr Peter McLellan, MP) died during the election. Of the fourteen defeated members, one belonged to the Australian Labor Party (the Hon Doug Walpole, MLC, who was a member for Melbourne Province, stood unsuccessfully for East Yarra Province), eleven to the Liberal Party, one to the National Party and one was an independent (the Hon Ian Baker, MP, who was the Labor member for Sunshine, and who stood unsuccessfully as an independent). The defeated members included four former Ministers.

Forty new members were elected to replace the retiring and defeated members. The party affiliations of the new members were: Australian Labor Party, twenty-eight; Liberal Party, ten; National Party, one; and independent, one. Overall, at the 1999 State election, 35 per cent of seats changed member, compared with 24 per cent of seats changing member at the 1996 State election.

(b) Elected 18 September 1999.

Candidates and parties

A total of 406* candidates nominated to contest the 1999 State election. This compares with 421 candidates who contested the 1996 election and 444 at the 1992 election (see Chart 3). The slight decline in the number of candidates in 1999 can be attributed mainly to the smaller number of Natural Law Party candidates in 1999.

At the 1999 State election 321 candidates contested the 88 Legislative Assembly seats, and 74 candidates contested the 22 Legislative Council seats. Eleven candidates nominated for the by-election vacancies in Ballarat, Melbourne and Melbourne North Provinces. These vacancies were created through the resignations of the members who were elected in 1996 and who resigned before the end of their terms.

In 1999 there was a substantial decrease in the number of three-, four- and five-candidate contests. The number of contests with only two candidates increased from five in 1996 to twenty-nine in 1999. There were also more contests with very large numbers of candidates in the 1999 State election, including a near-record sixteen candidates at the Frankston East supplementary election.

The number of women nominating as candidates was 130, compared with 118 at the 1996 State election. Twenty-nine women were elected, a substantial increase on the twenty women elected in 1996.

Appendix 2 lists all candidates contesting the 1999 State election in alphabetical order.

Chart 3. Number of candidates contesting Victorian State elections 1985-1999

* Includes the candidates for the simultaneous Legislative Council by-elections and the Frankston East supplementary election. Excludes the candidates for the failed election for Frankston East District.

Thirteen registered political parties stood candidates in 1999, compared with nine parties in 1996. The number of parties contesting Victorian State elections has increased since 1985 (see Chart 4).

Seventy-eight candidates were not endorsed by any registered party, which was considerably more than the sixty such candidates in 1996. Some of those candidates may have belonged to unregistered political parties, but the VEC's database does not enable such candidates to be distinguished from independents. Three independents were elected in 1999, compared with one at the previous State election.

Tables 3, 4 and 5 show the results for parties and candidates at the 1999 State election and the three simultaneous Province by-elections.

Chart 5 shows the percentage of first-preference votes received by the parties in elections for the Legislative Assembly since 1985.

Candidates' deposits forfeited

Of the 406 candidates, 98 obtained less than four per cent of the first-preference votes in their electorates, and thus forfeited the deposits lodged with their nominations.

Two-candidate-preferred counts

Two-candidate-preferred counts were conducted in the sixty-three Districts and eighteen Provinces that had more than two candidates, and also in the three Province by-elections. The purpose of the two-candidate-preferred count was to provide an early indication of the result of the election, and also to provide detailed information for political parties and analysts.

Before election day, the Electoral Commissioner selected the two candidates in each electorate who would be included in the two-candidate-preferred count. In most electorates these were the Labor and Coalition candidates, and in two Districts the incumbent independent member was selected. On election night, and after election day, the votes for the other candidates were distributed to the two selected candidates in each electorate on the basis of the preferences indicated on the ballot papers.

The selection of candidates for the two-candidate-preferred counts was accurate except in the Districts of Gippsland East, Mildura, Shepparton, Swan Hill, Warrnambool and Wimmera.

The two-candidate-preferred counts were based on the first count of votes. For this reason, in electorates where preference distributions were required, there are minor discrepancies between these figures and the recheck figures produced when first-preference votes were rechecked before the official preference distributions were conducted. As well, in a number of electorates where preference distributions were conducted, not all declaration votes were included in the two-candidate-preferred count.

Preference distributions

Preference distributions to determine the result of an election were required in each electorate where no candidate obtained an absolute majority (more than fifty per cent) of the first-preference votes. Preference distributions were conducted in twenty Districts and six Provinces in the State election, and also in the Ballarat Province by-election. In each case, the first step was to recheck all the first-preference votes in order to establish a secure basis for the distribution of preferences. (The rechecks usually detect a number of mistakes in the initial count, leading to minor discrepancies between rechecked figures and the two-candidate-preferred counts mentioned above.) Then the candidate with the fewest first-preference votes is declared excluded, and votes for that candidate are distributed to the remaining candidates according to the preferences on the ballot papers. This process continues until one candidate obtains an absolute majority of the formal votes. In four Districts (Bentleigh, Mildura, Monbulk and Oakleigh), the preference distribution reached a result while there were still more than two candidates remaining.

Recounts

Candidates are entitled to request a recount of all ballot papers at an election, or the Electoral Commissioner or Returning Officer may decide to conduct a recount. At recounts all decisions regarding disputed ballot papers are reserved for the Electoral Commissioner.

Recounts were conducted for Geelong District and Gippsland Province. In both cases, the recount confirmed the result of the previous count (with only minor differences in the numbers of votes).

Recounts are conducted on an electorate-wide basis rather than by individual polling places. The detailed breakdown of votes by polling place for Geelong District and Gippsland Province are therefore the recheck counts conducted before the first distribution of preferences. The preference distribution tables are derived from the results of the recounts.

Two-party-preferred vote

Since 1985, the Victorian Electoral Commission (and its predecessor, the State Electoral Office) has prepared two-party-preferred vote statistics for each State election. The purpose of the two-party-preferred vote is to show, for each electorate and for the State as a whole, how the vote was divided between the Australian Labor Party and the Liberal Party – National Party Coalition, taking into account the preferences of people who vote for minor parties and independents.

The two-party-preferred vote for the Legislative Assembly was calculated in the following way:

- In electorates where there were only two candidates, the first-preference votes for the Labor and the Coalition candidates constitute the Labor and Coalition two-party-preferred vote. There were 25 such Districts in the 1999 State election.
- In electorates where a preference distribution was conducted to determine the result, where the distribution continued until only two candidates were left in the count, and where the final distribution was between a Labor and a Coalition candidate, the final result of the preference distribution constituted the two-party-preferred vote. There were 11 such Districts in the 1999 State election.
- In fifty Districts the two-candidate-preferred count constituted the two-party-preferred vote. In these Districts the two-candidate-preferred count was between a Labor and a Coalition candidate, and a preference distribution to determine the result did not take place or could not be used (because the distribution was not between a Labor and a Coalition candidate, or because the distribution determined the result while there were still more than two candidates in the count).

- In electorates where neither the preference distribution nor the two-candidate-preferred count was between a Labor and a Coalition candidate, a special two-party-preferred count was conducted. There were two such Districts in the 1999 State election. In Gippsland West both the preference distribution and the two-candidate-preferred count were between the Liberal candidate and the independent member Susan Davies. In Mildura the preference distribution was between the Liberal candidate and the independent member Russell Savage, and the two-candidate-preferred count was between the National candidate and Mr Savage. In these two Districts preferences were distributed from the other candidates to the Labor and Liberal candidates.

In electorates where both Liberal and National candidates were standing, the leading Coalition candidate in that electorate was chosen as the Coalition candidate for the two-party-preferred vote. There were five such Districts in the 1999 State election: in Gippsland West, Mildura, Polwarth and Warrnambool the Liberal candidates were the Coalition candidates for the two-party-preferred vote, while in Wimmera the National candidate was the Coalition candidate.

It is worth noting that the two-party-preferred vote is obtained for information purposes only. It provides a measure—in each electorate and for the State as a whole—of support for the parties which in recent years have formed government. The two-party-preferred vote does not alter the result of the election in any electorate. The result is determined, according to law, by the count of first-preference votes and by preference distributions—where required, regardless of the party affiliations of the candidates.

In most State elections there are a number of cases where the Labor or Coalition candidates are not the two leading candidates in an electorate. For example, in the 1988 State election in Broadmeadows District the two leading candidates in terms of first-preference votes were the Labor candidate and the independent Labor member. There were four such cases in the 1996 State election and six in the 1999 State election (Gippsland East, in which the Labor candidate was second in terms of first-preference votes but was not in the final preference distribution; Gippsland West, Shepparton, Swan Hill and Wimmera, in which the Labor candidate came third on the first-preference votes; and Mildura, in which the Labor candidate came fourth on the first-preference votes). A two-party-preferred vote was established for these Districts by using either the two-candidate-preferred vote (Gippsland East, Shepparton, Swan Hill and Wimmera) or a special preference count (Gippsland West and Mildura).

It is possible to attempt to analyse the election statistics in another way—using the votes for the two leading candidates in each electorate. Such an approach would usually result in a statewide preferred vote allocating a certain proportion to Labor, a certain proportion to the Coalition and a certain proportion to independent candidates. The merit of this approach is that the preferred vote figure is derived from the leading candidates in each electorate, but it can lead to anomalies. For instance, in Wimmera District the two leading candidates were from the Liberal and National parties. Adopting this approach would have given 100 per cent of the votes for Wimmera to the Coalition, which would have distorted the figure for Wimmera and for the State as a whole. More importantly, this approach would destroy the concept of the two-party-preferred vote as it has been consistently applied by the VEC since 1985, by the Australian Electoral Commission in relation to Federal elections since 1983, by academic commentators in relation to Federal elections from 1958 to 1980, and by the State electoral authorities in other States.

The two-party-preferred vote for the Legislative Council is usually calculated in the same way as for the Assembly. However, in the 1999 State election there were no Labor candidates for Higinbotham and Templestowe Provinces. In Higinbotham there were two candidates, a Liberal and a Democrat, while in Templestowe there were three, a Liberal, a Green and a Democrat. The two-candidate-preferred count in Templestowe was between the Liberal and Green candidates.

The two-party-preferred vote for the Legislative Council is presented as follows:

In Table 7, the vote for twenty Provinces is divided between Labor and Coalition as usual. (For three Provinces the two-party-preferred vote is based on first preference votes; in six Provinces it is based on preference distributions; and in eleven Provinces it is based on the two-candidate-preferred counts). The vote for Higinbotham Province is divided between Liberal and Democrat candidates. (These were the only two candidates for Higinbotham.) The vote for Templestowe Province is divided between Liberal and Green (based on the two-candidate-preferred count).

In Table 8, the vote for all twenty-two Provinces is divided between Coalition and non-Coalition. This is a realistic depiction of the two-party-preferred vote given that Labor how-to-vote cards for Higinbotham and Templestowe advised voters to vote for the Democrat and Green candidate respectively.

Appendix 3

Margins by which seats are held

The following tables show the final votes for the first and second placed candidates in each seat, and the percentage point swing required for each seat to change hands. The figures are derived from:

- first-preference votes for electorates with two candidates;
- preference distributions where they were conducted; and
- two-candidate-preferred counts for the remaining seats.

The seats are grouped by party, and ranked from safest to most marginal.
